Source, Operational Data, and Contents:

1. Ordinarily, the material in ZJL-724-a concerning MATSUI Tadao would be considered "source information." However, in a broad but thoroughly sensible interpretation, we feel that this addition to the cast of characters in the TSUJI-HATTORI complex as well as the type of information herein contained is personality intelligence under circumstances already outlined. Please note that MATSUI is apparently not without some intelligence experience in the past, and that his probable involvement in HATTORI's rearment lobby plans is again contemplated by the latter. (cf. ZJL-689 for details of MATSUI's views on that; a later report will give more concrete and accurate data on HATTORI, his plans, and his group by []). Again, (cf. para h) it is obvious that HATTORI's mission from GSA G-2 to plan organization of a para-military Police Reserve was hardly kept secret; MATSUI and Source are now also indicated as definite confidants to the projected plan, as well as TSUJI.
2. Re ZJL-724-b, the most interesting points are as follows: (a) TSUJI's promising financial ventures and apparent access to large sums of money, considered far greater than profits from his books would provide; (b) the unmistakable impression from the wording of the original Japanese text of the report, that [] deliberately put MATSUI up to asking many of the questions herein answered in order to obtain desired information concerning TSUJI and the ATO Publishing Office on our behalf; (c) Source's continuing desire to attempt to place the blame for TSUJI's recent irresponsible actions upon bad influences close to him, principally SHIO and the ATO Publishing Office crowd, but Source's reluctant admission that TSUJI's connection to the ATO Publishing Office to political maneuverings and operations, and to the radically Pan-Asian views expounded by that group (and recently by TSUJI) is more definite than TSUJI admits; (d) [] more definite attempts, both by his own efforts and by importunate and never use of MATSUI, to get TSUJI out of politics and to undercut the influence of TSUJI's ATO.

Friends by isolating him from them—the long lectures and exhortations delivered to a man in TSUTU's condition and the rush to get him out of the hospital hardly leave us with the impression that TSUTU's personal safety is the only objective of this.

3. It may well be that this longer close-up period of the quonset trout Meimbu will be considered a waste of time and effort by some officials. However, Peabody firmly believes that this almost trite-like figure will be just as important to solving Japanese recidivist Nationalism dead as alive or not. He will become the martyr if he dies, which is probable; if he lives, he will be a bigger target through both physical torment and political persecution to fight back. His situation has all the potentialities of a "living political prisoner." In the very Japanese fashion, therefore, for the future, this present close insight into the man and his associates could be very worthwhile, we feel.

b. A forthcoming report gives further data on TSUTU's Pundian associations and projects. In this later report, [] re-explains clearly that he does not believe TSUTU's assertions or lack of connection to the Anglo Publishing Office group and to underground Pundian political circles.

5. Re 255-724-3, para. 12: It is interesting to note that TSUTU went home 7 September and was concealing cables. In view of Report Area [] on 11 September that contacts between Beijing and Chungking, Pundian to TSUTU were planned on 7 September for the following week, [] was amazingly enough not aware of TSUTU's hospitalization, despite his written up in local newspapers.
